David D’Arcangelo
Director, Massachusetts Office on Disability

Diagnosed with a rare eye disease that left him legally blind at a young age, David D’Arcangelo has built successful careers in both the public and private sectors during his past two decades of public service. D’Arcangelo now serves the Baker-Polito administration as the director of the Massachusetts Office on Disability, where he is working to bring about full and equal participation of people with disabilities in all aspects of life. He has previous experience in government, which includes serving in the administrations of four governors, the Massachusetts state Legislature and being elected as City Councilor At-Large in Malden.
