

Regulating Selling, Storing or Distributing Seeds: Preempting Local Control

The production of seed crops has been, and is still today, a vital part of agriculture. Currently, some political subdivisions below the state level have been considering regulating the planting, sale, storage or distribution of varieties of seed. Such regulations conflict with existing state and federal law and are often not based on the principles of good science. This legislation makes clear that the regulation of seed will be done by the state to ensure consistency statewide. The regulation does not interfere with local zoning ordinances on the location of seed handling facilities.
